Spunk Fakers, Slap Bangs and Tipping the Velvet By Patrick Chapman

Would you like to go to a penny gaff with a scammered moll? Give me a half tusheroon from your mollsack, and then we can have an 'aipenny bumper. Are you still a booze-shunter or have you become one of those balloon juice lowerers? Did you hear about the spunk faker who got batty fanged by a pudding scammerer? Look at that marm-puss in an arse-cooler, the one walking past the muffin-walloper: I'll bet she tips the velvet. And don't forget - if you don't want to visit the carsey you can always have a bit of cockney luxury.

If you understand what's being said above, you don't need to buy Spunk Fakers, Slap Bangs and Tipping the Velvet – you obviously speak like a Victorian Londoner already. However, if you want to understand the strange world of Victorian slang, Spunk Fakers, Slap Bangs and Tipping the Velvet will introduce you to some of the more ear-catching words found in the everyday speech of 19th century Londoners.

Whether you are an 'appy dosser, a bumaree, a fingersmith or a mush-fencer, I'll wager my beaver that this book will give you some of the words you need when you talk to a bangtail or a blower.
