From the Author

I wrote Caller of Light as a dedication to my mother who died of ovarian cancer after a yearlong battle. Love you, Mom! TJ.

From the Inside Flap

He was about to inquire into Carina's whereabouts when she emerged at the top of the stairs. She paused. Uncertainty flickered across her face. For a moment he thought she was going to fade back into the shadows of the upper floors. But she took a deep breath, squared her shoulders, and stepped off the landing.

He inhaled a ragged breath at the sight of her. Her dress accentuated the slight swing of her hips while the tight bodice molded perfectly to the swell of her breasts. With each step as she descended, a slow burn heated his blood, flooding hot desire straight to his groin. She shimmered in the soft light spilling from the room--a light acting as a path for her to follow, illuminating her way...to him.

She entered with her head bowed and lowered into a deep curtsy. "Your Majesty."

He extended his hand and tried to keep his fingers from twitching in anticipation of her touch. His body trembled when her hand slipped into his.

For the second time today, he couldn't let her go. She had entered the room on a whisper, but swept across his senses like a winter storm.

As she looked down, he resisted the urge to brush his thumb across the soft curve of her lips. She was a feast for his eyes to devour. He wanted to tell her that she looked stunning, but his voice failed him and he could only mutter her name in a gravelly, scrape of sound.
